MASTER OF LAWS IN AMERICAN LAW

FOR FOREIGN GRADUATES: ENERGY LAW CONCENTRATION

The University of Tulsa · College of Law · 3120 East Fourth Place · Tulsa, Oklahoma 74104

The University of Tulsa College of Law offers an LL.M. degree in American Law for graduates of foreign law schools that features a concentration in Energy Law. Through the Energy Law concentration, students examine legal and policy approaches for achieving the important goals of energy reliability, sustainable supplies of natural resources, and a healthy environment.

Students pursuing the Energy Law concentration will benefit from The University of Tulsa's legacy as an oil and gas industry research powerhouse and its diverse energy programs in engineering, business, law, environmental protection and information security. These benefits include opportunities to interact with the College of Law's Sustainable Energy & Resources Law (SERL) Program and the National Energy Policy Institute (NEPI). They will also be able to network with the SERL Board of Visitors, which is comprised of energy, environmental and natural resources professionals in the midst of prestigious careers, including:

- James Bender, Senior Vice President, General Counsel, Williams
- Angie Beehler, Senior Director, Energy Regulation/Legislation, Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.
- Brad Carson, Director, National Energy Policy Institute; Associate Professor of Entrepreneurship & Business Law, The University of Tulsa
- Kelly Hunter Foster, Senior Counsel, Water Keeper Alliance
- Henry Hood, Senior Vice President – Land & Legal, General Counsel, Chesapeake Energy
- Kevin Patrick, Founding Shareholder, Patrick, Miller & Kropf
- Thomas Schroedter, Shareholder, Hall Estill
- John Williams, Partner, Connor & Winters, LLP
