Recycle Art with Make:Tulsa Tuesday, April 2nd 5:30 – 7 PM Allen Chapman Activity Center University of Tulsa

To welcome Elizabeth Terry of the popular blog, Living a Plastic Free Life, who will be discussing her new book Plastic Free at the Annual TU Student Research Colloquium, make:Tulsa has organized a wonderful learning opportunity for alternative uses for that plastic and other recyclables.

Join make:Tulsa while we learn to make a variety of useful and decorative items out of recyclable materials. Organizers will also have an idea table from the Tulsa Public Library, if you'd like to try something different and a display table of upcycled/recycled art for further inspiration.

Projects will include:

- -Bottlecap pincushions
- -Newspaper Gift Bags
- -Plastic Milk Carton Tupperware
- -Junk Mail Earrings

Participants are encouraged to bring some of their own recyclable materials (bottlecaps, newspapers, junk mail, and/or plastic milk cartons). Anything we don't use gets recycled at the end of the night.

This event precedes Elizabeth Terry's lecture on her book, Plastic Free, which starts at 7 PM in Great Hall B of the Allen Chapman Actitivity Center. For more information on the lecture portion of this event, visit www.utulsa.com or www.utulsa.edu/research-colloquium.

To learn more, visit http://www.maketulsa.com/.

make:Tulsa is a group of crafters, artists, and designers in the Tulsa area. They host art and craft classes, workshops and other social crafting events for makers of all kinds. make:Tulsa was born to create an outlet for hobby crafters and those who wish to create together, but do not necessarily have a business for their work. make:Tulsa supports DIY ethics and hopes to encourage creativity in our lovely community of makers. make:Tulsa was founded by the organizers of Indie Emporium, Tulsa's first indie art, craft, & fashion event.